

CHANNEL ISLANDS
BRUSSELS OFFICE

Introduction

The Channel Islands, or ‘Les Iles Anglo-Normandes’, have a combined population of approximately 170,000. They are located just off the coast of France, in the English Channel. Their history is intertwined with those of both the British Isles and France, and this is reflected in their unique culture and their native languages.

The Islands’ economies are mainly based on financial services, tourism and agriculture. They are also home to many EU citizens and in particular, significant populations of Portuguese, Polish and Latvian nationals live and work in the Islands.

The Channel Islands are British Crown Dependencies which are located in the English Channel, but are geographically closer to the coasts of Normandy and Brittany. They have a direct allegiance to the British Crown which goes back over 800 years. Channel Islanders are British Citizens, but the Islands enjoy a high degree of autonomy, including their own parliamentary, fiscal and judicial systems.

The Channel Islands comprise two separate jurisdictions, the Bailiwick of Guernsey and the Bailiwick of Jersey. The term ‘Bailiwick’ derives from an ancient administrative term for an area under the control of a Bailiff. The Bailiff is the head of the judiciary and is the most senior civic figure in each Island. The Bailiwick of Guernsey comprises three separate jurisdictions: Guernsey, Alderney and Sark. The Bailiwick of Jersey comprises the island of Jersey.

The Islands are not part of the United Kingdom, but they work closely with the UK Government which is constitutionally responsible for the Islands’ defence and for formal international representation. Through Framework Agreements signed by the UK with each of the Islands (Jersey, May 2007; Guernsey, December 2008), it was agreed that the UK will not act internationally on account of the Islands without prior consultation and recognises that they each have an international identity that is different from that of the UK.

The Channel Islands participate in the UK-EU Trade and Cooperation Agreement (TCA) in respect of fisheries and the trade in goods. Outside of the formal TCA relationship, the Islands are treated as third countries and are not part of the European Economic Area (EEA). They maintain close relationships with the EU and its Member States in many different fields, and those relationships are deeply valued by Islanders.

Liberation celebrations

Our History & Culture

The Islands' status as Crown Dependencies dates back to 1204 when King John of England lost continental Normandy to the French King Philippe Auguste. The Islands, which had been part of the Duchy of Normandy since 933, elected to remain loyal to the English Crown. The relationship between the Channel Islands and the monarchy was formalised in 1259 when the Treaty of Paris was agreed between Henry III of England and Louis IX of France. Although in it, Henry III abandoned his right to the title "Duke of Normandy", his rights to the Islands were confirmed and he still ruled the Islands in that capacity, continuing to observe their established laws, liberties and customs. These local rights were later confirmed in a series of Charters by successive Kings and Queens and are the origins and basis of the Islands' status as Crown Dependencies.

As evidence of their Norman heritage, the Islands' indigenous languages, Guernésiais and Jèrriais, are derived from Norman French. Both Islands are working to preserve these native tongues as part of their cultural identities, as the number of speakers declined following the Second World War.

The Channel Islands were the only part of the British Isles to be occupied by the Nazi forces, from June 1940 until May 1945, and many children were evacuated to England during the war years. The Channel Islands were heavily fortified with anti-tank walls, bunkers and gun batteries as part of the Atlantic Wall; these fortifications remain and now form a distinctive part of the coastline.

Both Guernsey and Jersey celebrate a special holiday on the 9th May each year, Liberation Day, to remember the day in 1945 that the Occupation finally ended.

The King is the Head of State and the Lieutenant-Governor in each Island acts as His Majesty's personal representative. Guernsey and Jersey are not sovereign states, but they are not and have never been part of the UK, a British colony or a dependent territory. The Islands are not represented in the UK Parliament.

Facts & Figures

Official language:
English

Indigenous languages:
Guernésiais (Guernsey); Jèrriais (Jersey)

7 permanently inhabited islands:
Guernsey, Herm, Jethou, Alderney, Sark, Brecqou, Jersey

Main towns:
St Peter Port (Guernsey); St Helier (Jersey)

Population:
Guernsey 64,000; Jersey 103,000

Size:
Guernsey 78 km²; Jersey 120 km²

Constitutional status:
Crown Dependencies (self-governing since 1204)

GDP:
Guernsey £3.4 billion (2021);
Jersey £5 billion (2021)

Literary lights

Victor Hugo was exiled and lived in both Jersey and Guernsey. He spent 15 years in Guernsey, and it is possible to visit the house where he lived and wrote works such as Les Travailleurs de la Mer and Les Misérables.

Jersey is home to Gerald Durrell, conservationist and author, and founder of Jersey Zoo which has been protecting rare species and preserving threatened ecosystems for six decades.

The small island of Sark was home to Gormenghast author Mervyn Peake.

TH White, author of The Once and Future King, and The Sword in the Stone, made his home in Alderney.

The relationship with the EU

Following the UK's exit from the European Union (EU), the Islands' formal relationship with the EU is via the EU-UK Trade and Cooperation Agreement (the TCA). The TCA applies to the Islands to a more limited extent than to the UK, covering the relationship between the Islands and the EU in relation to:

- trade in goods, including customs tariff and procedures, as well as recognition of certain regulatory standards in relation to agricultural and manufactured goods; and
- access to fisheries resources in the territorial waters of each Bailiwick.

Outside of the formal TCA relationship, the Islands are treated as jurisdictions outside of the EU and ones that are not part of the European Economic Area (EEA). This means they are treated as 'third countries'.

As third countries, and due to their location and close trading relationships with both the UK and EU Member States, the Islands voluntarily implement appropriate EU legislation and apply relevant international standards. The Islands are not, for example, part of the single market in financial services and so have negotiated limited market access as a third country on a case-by-case basis by being assessed as applying equivalent standards to those in the EU.

By virtue of their geographical location, the Islands also applied the relevant EU aviation and maritime measures to secure and underpin their transport links.

The Channel Islands are not

- Part of the UK
- Represented in the UK Parliament
- UK Overseas Territories (like Gibraltar or Bermuda)
- Members of the EU
- Members of the European Economic Area (EEA)
- Members of the European Free Trade Area (EFTA)
- Covered by the EU Overseas Countries and Territories (OCT) Decision
- "Small-sized countries which maintain specific relations of proximity with the EU" (Lisbon Treaty Declaration 3 – Andorra, Monaco, San Marino)
- Covered by the EU's European Neighbourhood Policy (ENP)
- Represented in the European Parliament
- Recipients of any funds from the EU budget

Potato farming

Economy & Business

Both Islands have historic agricultural and fishing traditions. While they now play a smaller role in terms of GDP, these industries are still key to the Islands' identities. Dairy farming, built around the famous Jersey and Guernsey breeds, remains a proud agricultural tradition for producing high quality milk products. Jersey Royal potatoes, oysters, and other products are also important exports for the Islands.

Tourism also plays an important part of the economy in both Islands, with high quality hotels and restaurants, beautiful beaches and cliffs. The Islands' unique histories and anglo-norman culture attract hundreds of thousands of holiday makers each year.

The largest employer and contributor to GDP in both Islands is financial services. The Islands are significant net providers of liquidity and investment funds to the EU economy. As third countries, and due to their location and close trading relationships with both the UK and EU Member States, the Islands voluntarily implement appropriate EU legislation and apply relevant international standards. The Islands have robust and internationally respected systems of financial regulation, and the independent Guernsey and Jersey regulators regularly cooperate with EU counterparts. Both Islands are assessed as being amongst the best quality financial centres in the world when measured against the standards set by the Financial Action Task Force for countering terrorist financing and anti-money laundering.

Climate & Environment

In common with other small Islands, the Channel Islands face significant threats from climate change. Protection of the environment on land and in the surrounding marine areas is crucial for the unique ecosystems of the Islands.

Both Guernsey and Jersey are committed to reaching 'net zero' emissions by 2050, as both Islands understand the need to play their part in the global effort to combat climate change.

Both Islands actively participate in international efforts to tackle climate change, including participating in COP meetings which provide the Islands with opportunities to share their work on climate change policy, green finance and sustainability, and to collaborate with other international jurisdictions.

The Islands' financial services sectors are leaders in green finance initiatives. In 2018, the Guernsey Financial Services Commission published the Guernsey Green Fund rules, creating the world's first regulated green investment fund product.

The Little Chapel

Island Treasures

The Islands are home to some of the oldest monuments in European history, with some dating back to 3500 BCE including dolmens, neolithic standing stones and burial grounds. The Neolithic passage grave of La Hougue Bie in Jersey is one of the 10 oldest buildings in the world.

The Islands' museums and galleries host various permanent and temporary exhibitions showcasing the fruits of their artistic heritage. The father of the Impressionist art movement, Pierre-Auguste Renoir, in the late 1800s completed 15 paintings in less than 30 days in Guernsey. Claude Cahun, French artist, photographer, writer and activist on the position of women, lived in Jersey where she mounted an underground resistance campaign following the Nazi occupation of the Island in WWII.

The Little Chapel in Guernsey, thought to be the smallest consecrated church anywhere in the world was built by a French monk, based on the basilica at Lourdes. It is decorated with thousands of shells and pieces of broken china.

In 2012, two metal detectorists announced that they had uncovered in Jersey what could be Europe's largest hoard of Iron Age Celtic coins. Estimated to be around 2000 years old, the hoard contained nearly 70,000 late-Iron Age and Roman coins, rings, torques and other jewellery.

À bétao • À bétôt

www.channelislands.eu

Channel Islands Brussels Office

Rond-Point Schuman 6, B-1040 Brussels, Belgium